Mrs. Solon Vlasto Demands $500,000 Damages from Mrs. Culver for Alleged Alienation of Her Husband's Affections.

CHARGES VIGOROUSLY DENIED BY WOMAN.

She and "Count" Say a Friendship of Long Standing Dictated Their Meetings on Recent European Trips.

Mrs. Mary J. C. Culver, daughter of Dnited States Senator Clark, of Montana, and plaintiff in a suit for absolute livorce from her husband, Dr. Everett Mallory Culver, has been made a defendant in a suit for $500,000 damages for the alleged allenation of her husband's affections by Mrs. Elizabeth R. Vlasto. The man in the case, "Count" Solon Vlasto, an importer and clitor of the Greek periodical Atlantis, is a well-known figure in society. He is tall, distinguished-looking, courtly in manner and a master of all the modern tongues. Residing here the greater part of the year, he maintains a residence in Athens and has aspirations to membership in the Greek National Assembly. He has friends and enemies, too, in the local Greek colony. Mrs. Vlasto is an Englishwoman. She married Mr. Vlasto on Nov. 24, 1875, at the Lattle Church Around the Corner, and they have a son, Constantine, nov in his twenty-seventh year. She and her husband have lived apart for some rs. She says their troubles are coincident with his social popularity.

Two European Trips.

In her complaint Mrs. Vlasto charges that Mrs. Culver "wilfully intending to injure the plaintiff, enticed her husband to live separate and apart from her." The specific acts on which the charge are based were incidents of a European trip from which Mrs. Culver has just returned and which coincides, it is plaimed, with a sojourn abroad made by Vlasto, which ended a week previous to Mrs. Culver's return to New York. Paris and Switzerland and other places are mentioned by Mrs. Vlasto in her

Mrs. Vlasto visited the White Sta line pier on Thursday of last week, intending to make a sensational scene if her husband returned on the same ship a week previous, but he intended to be present with other of Mrs. Culver's friends to welcome her home. friends to welcome her home. A painful scene was avoided by his non-appearance.

Mrs. Culver was celebrating her return from abroad by a reception to a number of her friends when she received the service of summons in the many persons going and coming on the steamers.

"Mrs. Vlasto knew that among my friends was Mrs. Culver and she knows that Mrs. Culver is a wealthy woman. The whole affair is a put-up job by her and those backing her to induce Senator Clark to pay money. "I do not know Mrs. Viasto, but I do know she has not lived with her husband for seventeen years. Does it not seem strungs that she brings such a suit at this late date?"

Mrs. Culver was asked about a picture of herself and Vlasto, taken in Oriental costume.

"That was all a lark," she said. "It was taken with several other persons the seme acceptance of the several other persons the seme acceptance of the several other persons the seme acceptance of the seme acceptance triot, also objected to somethink the published and broke an umbrella over his head.

Vlasto's trouble with his wife became public property in 1893, and several sensational charges were made. Telemaque stational charges were made. Telemaque trimaenis, a Greek author, and Mr. Botassi, the Greek Consul, sided with Mrs. Vlasto, and the husband charged that the whole affair was cooked up by his enemies to oust him from the presidency of the Athena Society and prevent his being named as Greek Consul for this port.

About this time Vlasto was named as a Knight of the Cross of the Saviour by the King of Greece, but before the medal and ribbon were forwarded to him his enemies in Athens succeeded in having his name stricken from the list. He is said to have made the acquaintance of many New York society folk aboard ship, and his captivating manners led to the acquaintance being maintained. was taken after a fancy dress party. I was taken with several other persons the same evening."

Asked about the particular charges in Mrs. Vlasto's complaint, particularly the incidents of her recent European trip. Mrs. Culver said: "Please spare me the details of this horrible affair. They are wholly false. I shall talk no more about it, but put the entire matter in the hands of my lawyers."

Mrs. Vlasto resides at the Westminster Hotel in Irvins place. She has attained considerable newspaper notoriety through her marital troubles.

Last Thursday while at the White Starpler waiting for the docking of the Teutonic, on which she thought her husband would arrive with Mrs. Culver, she told the newspaper men she was there to horsewhip her husband for his perfidy. She hinted to-day that her husband was deeply interested in the Culver divorce proceedings, and that she had refused alluring financial recompense to allow him to obtain a divorce.

"My only object," she said, "is to stop this divorce. If I succeed in doing this I will be recompensed for the notoriety I have been compelled to undergo. "My husband and I lived happily together until four years ago when he began going out in society, and the flattery women paid him turned his head. He told me he had made a mistake in living a secluded life and that he should always have mingled with those who appreciated his charms. After that our life became unbearable. He wanted me to consent to a divorce, but I refused, even when large financial temptation was placed in my way."

Count in Denial.

Count in Denial.

To all of this "Count" Vlasto enters emphatic denial. "I go every year to Europe," he said. "This last summer I visited London, Paris, Marseilles and later Athens. Returning I met Mrs. Culver in Blarritz. We were also in Paris at the same time. She was at the Langham; I was at the Grand Hotel. Of course, we dined together several times. I am a near friend of the family. Dr. Culver and his brother Harry are close friends of mine. I had a letter from Dr. Culver after my return and have dined with Harry Culver.

'These charges of Mrs. Vlasto are utterly absurd. I am thirty years older than Mrs. Culver. As a matter of fact in affections were allenated from Mrs. Vlasto many years ago. We separated by mutual agreement ten years ago and I have alone contributed to her support. "She sued me for divorce in 1895, but."

She was pouring tea when a servant announced a gentleman caller. He was welcomed, Mrs. Culver not recognizing the name but thinking him a friend of one of her guests. She advanced to greet him and he deftly placed the official documents in her hand, explained their nature and bowing with the grace of a cavaller, withdrew.

Collapses After Party.

Mrs. Culver saw him to the door of the apartment and returned to her guests all brightness and animation. Her spirits never flagged until the last guest had departed and then she collapsed. Her manner was greatly distraught when seen later in reference to the suit.

"What can I say in answer to these awful accusations," she said, "except that they are wholly untrue. Mr. Vlasto is an old friend of our family. He is a particular friend of my father and has been like a father to my sister and myself.
